Activation of phospholipase D activity in human platelets is critically dependent on the presence of exogenous calcium. Addition of carboxypeptidase Y to intact platelets, which inactivates all lipases, leads to the inactivation of endogenous phospholipase D with a very similar Ca2+ requirement as exogenous phospholipase D. Choosing a color scheme Now that you've taken a picture of your family, you're not only busy trying to assemble a complete family photo album, but also you also need to try to find a way to create the perfect color scheme. There are a few things you need to consider. First, you'll want to choose a color palette that complements your image, a color that goes well with the textures and colors of your image. For example, if your photo is a shot of your family, you might decide to use a warm color palette. This is a color palette that includes colors in the red, orange and yellow range, like bronze, gold, red and marigold. You can, however, also use a cool palette if the family is in front of a green environment, like a park, or a beach. With a cool palette, you should use colors in the green range, like blue, green and purple. You should also avoid using bright blues and reds. Color scheme tips There are two things you'll want to consider when picking a color palette: contrast and vibrancy. For example, if you're shooting a beach scene, you will want to use cool colors because the image doesn't need a lot of contrast. Or if you're shooting a portrait, you may want to use bright colors to emphasize the focus. Sometimes, there is no right or wrong color scheme. In fact, it's totally your choice. As a general rule, though, we recommend avoiding the use of red, orange and yellow
